Friedrich Nietzsche predicted that the twentieth century would be a century of great wars. It was. More than one hundred million people died in wars; about the same number died at the hands of their own governments.

In its early years, philosophers, scientists, psychologists, artists, musicians, poets, and writers of fiction overturned our understanding of the physical world, of human behavior, of thought and its limits, and our understanding of art, creativity, and beauty. The challenge of totalitarianism divided those committed to freedom. The devastation of two World Wars raised deep questions about the nature and meaning of human existence.

This course will explore these themes as they develop in twentieth-century philosophy, history, literature, art, and music.

University of Texas Honor Code

The core values of The University of Texas at Austin are learning, discovery, freedom, leadership, individual opportunity, and responsibility. Each member of the university is expected to uphold these values through integrity, honesty, trust, fairness, and respect toward peers and community.

The new Student Honor Code: "As a student of The University of Texas at Austin, I shall abide by the core values of the University and uphold academic integrity."

The grading system for this course uses pluses and minuses. Minuses are reserved for near-misses. Out of respect for your fellow students, please do not use cell phones in class.

Your papers must be your own work. You must not use material without citing your sources.

and

Midterm and final exams. The midterm exam (20% of the final grade) will consist of 70 multiple-choice questions. The final (30% of the final grade) will consist of 105 questions. You may not use books or notes. The midterm will take place in class on Friday, October 16. The final will be held on Saturday, December 12 from 2:00pm to 5:00pm. The final is NOT comprehensive; it covers only the second half of the course, but it does include some questions drawing from both halves, and it does include history questions from throughout the course. There is a practice midterm exam (with answers) and a practice final (also with answers).

Papers: You must write four short (500-1000 word) papers, three of them on the assigned books for the course. Each paper counts 10% of the final grade.

October 12: Agatha Christie, The Murder of Roger Ackroyd
November 9: Iris Murdoch, Under the Net
November 25: Critical Lecture or Art Paper (see below)
December 4: J. K. Rowling, Harry Potter and the Sorcerer’s Stone

Reading Papers: Here are the rules for the papers on readings:

1. Your paper must identify and discuss critically one philosophical theme in the book.
2. You must send your paper to your TA before class on the day the paper is due. Papers submitted once class begins will not count.
3. The papers must be your own work. You must not use material from anyone else without citing the source. That includes Wikipedia and other online sources. The best way to follow this rule is to read the works yourself and write your own reactions, not someone else’s.

Critical Lecture or Art Paper: Among your four papers, you must write one of the following:

1. A lecture paper: a thoughtful reaction to an event you attend in the University Lecture Series. (Due November 25.) You may write about another lecture, reading, etc., that takes place on campus if you miss the University Lecture Series. A good place to find such lectures in philosophy is the Philosophy Department Events page.
2. An art paper: a thoughtful reaction to a twentieth-century artwork found on this campus (e.g., at the Blanton Museum or the Humanities Research Center; you may also write about a concert, theater production, etc., taking place on campus). (Due November 25.) Please submit all papers in Canvas. Do not send them to Professor Bonevac or Professor Flukinger. They are easily confused.

Attendance and participation in discussion sections: 10% of your final grade. Your TA will frequently take attendance at sections. Your base score will be the percentage of sections you attended in that sample. Your TA may adjust that base score by one or two points in either direction based on your participation.
